The only thing which it said was required to be accomplished was certain security arrangements in the south of Lebanon, similar to those which were made in 1978."

"Yes, he is correct," Mr. Assad said, "provided Israel withdraws without imposing any conditions

Mr. Assad condemned the Israel-Lebanon accord because he said it "restricted the sovereignty of Lebanon and deprived it of the freedom of decision."

Interview Highlights

LOS ANGELES - In an interview last week with Lally Weymouth, a free-lance writer, President Hafez al-Assad of Syria offered his comments on the situation in the Middle East and on U.S. peace efforts in the region.

Q: What are Syria's intentions and what are your requirements in Lebanon?

A: Our intentions and our requirements in Lebanon are that Lebanon should be a free country and active member within the Arab framework, free of Israeli invasion and hegemony, doing its duties and exercising its rights within the framework of its Arab identity and its Arab obligations, the same as Syria and the rest of the Arab countries. These are our intentions and requirements. Q: The American aim as I understand it is to make an arrangement whereby the Syrians and the Israelis would withdraw from Lebanon. But if America refuses to abrogate the Israeli-Lebanese accord, are there any conditions under which you would consider a withdrawal of Syrian troops, and what are they? A: It is a mistake for anyone to believe or to think that we will ever leave Lebanon as a morsel which it is easy for the Israelis to swallow. Lebanon is an Arab country with whom we are bound by a common history and a common destiny. Therefore, the problem is not the problem of the withdrawal of the Syrian forces from Lebanon. There is no need for anybody to persuade us to withdraw our troops from Lebanon. If really the intention of the United States is this, then it has only to make Israel implement the UN Security Council Resolutions 508 and 509 concerning the Israeli invasion of Lebanon. These two resolutions stipulate that Israel should withdraw completely from Lebanese territory without imposing any conditions on Lebanon. Here we should observe that the U.S. voted in favor of these two

Q: Will Lebanon be partitioned between Israel and Syria? A: The word "partition" is oot the correct word in this context because as you know, Syria has been in Lebanon for eight years. The correct expression is that Israel has occupied and annexed to it the south of Lebanon, Israel is the foreign element which entered into Lebanon.

Pakistanis Defy Zia With Major Protest

Police in Gdansk Break Up Protest Marking Anniversary of 1980 Strikes

By Harry Trimborn

Los Angeles Times Service WARSAW - More than 1,000 people demonstrated in the Baltic port of Gdansk on Sunday to mark the third anniversary of the series of strikes throughout Poland in 1980 that led to the establishment of the now-banned labor federa-tion Solidarity.

Riot police armed with batons broke up the demonstration as participants marched toward the monument near the Leoin Shipyards that was erected during the Solidarity era to honor workers killed in anti-government riots.

It was the first known confrontation between police and demon-strators since the government lifted martial law July 22 as a demonstra-tion of its claim that the country was returning to normal following the turmoil of the Solidarity period. Witnesses said a oumber of per-said Sunday it had extended its military deployment in Chad, while diplomatic moves got under way to halt the desert war that is said to involve Libya's Soviet-equipped air force and regular army.

Guy Penne, the chief adviser on African affairs to President Francois Mitterrand of France, arrived Sunday from Paris and held an hourlong conference with Presi-dent Hissène Habré on France's military support and on simultancous efforts to defuse the crisis.

Information Minister Soumaila Mahamat of Chad announced Saturday that government forces had withdrawn from the casis of Oum Chalouba, retreating out of range of the Libyan air attacks to a defensive line running west in east through Salal and Biltine.

The retreat, following the loss of the northern strategic oasis of Faya-Largeau, in effect abandooed virtually all the thinly populated northern half of the landlocked byan-backed rebels led by Chad's former president, Goukouni Oued-

Mr. Hernu said Saturday that the initial deployment of French troops in Chad was complete, but that the possibility remained that reinforcements might be sent.

He declined to specify the number of French paratroops in Chad, where, Mr. Hernu said, they are serving solely as instructors avoiding any combat role alongside Mr. Habre's troops.

After an initial announcement in Paris that 180 paratroops were being sent to Chad to help the go-vernment forces in fighting Li-byan-backed rebels, government sources have acknowledged that the French contingent oumbers from 300 to 500. Others have sugpested that the continuent is as large as 1,000 men. A similar statement, suggesting that France is willing to increase its commitment to stop the insurgent advance, came from Claude Chevsson, the minister of external relations. "The support of France for Chad will be developed in relation to the circumstances." Mr. Cheysson said.

Western military sources told The Associated Press that Libya was continuing to pour supplies and reinforcements into Faya-Largeau, which was recaptured

Peru Works to Develop Its Jungle

TARAPOTO, Peru - Peruvians call it the eyebrow of the jungle, a 1,000-mile arc of footbills cloaked by Amazon jungle in the shadow of the Andes

For centuries, this area of the Amazon River basin has been the most backward part of Peru, ignored by the Incas who ruled from the mountains, by the Spaniards who conquered them and by the descendants of the Spaniards who govern today from the desert coast on the other side of the Andes.

Only 15 percent of Peru's 18 million people live on this, the jungle side. But it is here where two-thirds of the country, the third largest in South America, lies. And it is here where Peru's development hopes

Tamil Leader Puts Death Toll at 2,000

NEW DELHI (Reuters) — The leader of the main political party of the minority Tamil community in Sri Lanka said Sunday that 2,000 people probably died in two months of ethnic unrest that culminated in riots throughout the island at the end of July.

Appapillai Amerikalingam, secretary-general of the Tamil United Liberation Front, gave the figure to reporters after talks with Prime Minister Indira Gandhi of India, whom he said he had briefed on the situation in Sri Lanka.

He said the figure included deaths in the whole of the island since anti-Tamil violence broke out in the eastern port of Trincomalee on June 3. The Sri Lankan government has not given figures for a comparable period, but has said about 380 people died in nine days of bloodshed after Tamil guerrillas killed 13 army soldiers in the northern town of Jaffina on July 23.

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — Haitians headed to the polls Sanday for the capital's first municipal elections in 26 years of Duvalier family rule. The country's only anti-government party, the Christian Democrats, fielded no candidates following the arrests of five leaders. Turnout appeared light in the morning at the 52 civilian-run polling places in the capital of 1.5 million people.

Highlighting the elections was the race for mayor between the incumbent, Franck Romain, a former Haitian Army colonel appointed in 1981 by President Jean-Claude Duvalier, and his challenger, Wilfred Justin, who says he advocates "peaceful Duvalierism."

Illegal Trade in Panda Skins Reported LONDON (AP) - Rare giant pandas are being killed in China and their skins offered for sale by a Taiwanese trader for $25,000 or more, the Sunday Times reported. The newspaper said the trade in panda skins — illegal in China since 1962 — came to light after a museum in Birmingham, England, received a solicitation from Taipei and sent a photocopy to a London-based conservation group, the Flora and Fauna Society.

There are fewer than 1,000 giant pands alive in the wild, almost all living in the mountainous Chinese provinces of Szechuan and Gansu, and efforts to breed them in captivity have met with little success.

Saguy Reported Onitting Israeli Army

TEL AVIV (Reuters) — Israel's former chief of military intelligence, General Yehoshna Saguy, is quitting the army after losing his post for his actions during last year's Beirut massacre of Palestinians, Israeli newspapers said Sunday.

General Saguy left his command on the recommendation of the judicial inquiry into the massacres in the Sabra and Chatila refugee camps by Lebanese Christian militiamen. The inquiry said he failed to warn of the risks in allowing the militiamen into the Palestinian refugee camps after the murder of their commander, President-elect Bashir

General Sagny, who has spent 32 years in the army, was later appointed head of the Israeli Defense College. He was quoted as saying he was not suitable for the post but would return to the army if offered a position of national responsibility.

Computer Experts Say Security Threats Persist

After Faya-Largeau

The empire-minded Colonel Qadhafi has done something nasty that troubles many Africans and embarrasses their foreign patrons, including France and the United States. The mischief be has done, however, should not be treated in a manner to make of it a myth. Faya-Largean is not Stalingrad. This was a small skirmish in a remote place and was far from the first of its type. Libya's forces won out not because they represent some irresistible green tide but because in the ebb and flow of military action in the African desert they had an advantage at this time and place. Politically the Chadian figure supported by Libya appears to be no more than a warlord on the make — in other words, a politician familiar in hard-togovern, poorly governed, little-governed Chad.
One evident result of the Libyan pounce on Faya-Largeau is to mobilize a coalition of forces that are prepared, for their separate local or strategic reasons, to take some kind of stand against the further depredations of Col-onel Qadhafi. The coalition was ineffective in the first stage, but it is in a position to make a difference in the next. It would be surprising if President Hissène Habre's regional patrons in Egypt and Sudan, both targets of Libyan subversion themselves, were not more ready now. Other Africans are also aroused. French paratroopers, strongly armed, are finally and belatedly in place in the capital of Chad in the south. The United States

no longer appears to be awkwardly out in front of the anti-Qadhafi elements.

President Reagan had it about right in his remarks on the Chad crisis on Thursday. He steered clear of rhetoric whose effect in the past has been to paint Colonel Qadhafi as a menace so powerful, radical and Sovietinspired as virtually to cry out for a direct American intervention against him. Instead Mr. Reagan emphasized the poor quality of the information about Chad available to Washington, the clear implication being a need to proceed cautiously. Chad, he observed, is historically in France's sphere of interest another piece of sober distancing. "I don't see any situation that would call for military inter-vention by the United States there," he said. Chad finds the United States in the usual difficult spot. The African country is not important to Americans in any conventional or traditional way, yet it is part of the business of being a great power to do what can be done to keep local or regional bullies from pushing unoffending countries around. Mr. Reagan caught the spirit of this dilemma when be said it was not the American role to play world pobceman and when, in the same breath, he observed that threats to American security can arise worldwide. To combine the necessary restraint and responsibility takes good judg-ment, good company and, not least, good luck.

— THE WASHINGTON POST.

What pangs President Habré of Chad must have felt when he urgently requested French troops to return to the former French colony to help in his fight against Libyan-backed rebels. He is himself a proud and successful former guerrilla foe of the legionnaires who aided another Chad president a decade ago. President Mitterrand must have swallowed hard when he bowed to Mr. Habre's request. For years the French Socialist leader had harshly criticized his predecessors' interventions in Africa, unconscionable reminders of the imperialism of an earlier age.

Meanwhile, the fighting has called forth substantial self-discipline from Washington. President Reagan, often concerned with demonstrating American credibility by giving military support to friendly regimes in trouble, this time drew the line at warnings and displays of resolve: radar planes, munitions air-lifts, a weapons-training mission by three ad-visers truly sent only to advise.

The behavior in all three capitals was right and necessary. On Tuesday the French defense minister reminded the world: "It is ooi France that is taking the initiative of internationalizing the conflict . . . The Libyans did it." And at his news conference on Thursday Mr. Reagan explained that be could not foresee a need for American military intervention because Chad "is not our primary sphere of influence. It is that of France." In a perfect world Chad would not be in anybody's sphere of influence, but without some countervailing action it might soon have entered Colonel Qadhafi's. Better the reluctant, temporary presence of a post-imperial France than long-term dominance by the dictatorial Libyan.

The French paratroopers can only buy time; it is the warring factions of Chad themselves that must produce the political solution capable of sustaining a nation. In more than 20 years of formal independence, such a solution years of formal independence, such a solution has proven elusive. To find one now requires the overcoming of obstacles as formidable as the presence of Libya to the north.

These include primal poverty and ethnic fragmentation. Probably most serious of all, Chad is beset by a tradition of solving political difference that the political serious constitution of the constitution of the differences through violence, something that neither foreign force nor restraint can remedy.

Yalta, Helsinki, Madrid, ...

BRUSSELS — Two Andropovs took charge of the Madrid conference, and both are cautious men. Yuri, in the Kremlin, and his son Igor, in Madrid, led the Soviet Union in declaring that it was "de-termined to assure the effective application of human rights and of basic freedoms," including the freedom to organize labor unions.

No one can have any illusions about the practical consequences of such a declaration. Why did Moscow commit itself to legal obligations that will never be met unless there is a radical change in the So-viet regime? Why did the Kremlin give the West a potentially power-ful psychological weapon? The Kremlin showed diplomatic skill. In exchange for promises it has no intention or even means of keeping, it saved the "Helsinki process and spirit" from seemingly in-evitable death through failure. And it averted any questioning of the inviolability of the frontiers that emerged after World War II.

In the absence of a peace treaty ending that war, Moscow can point to the Final Act of the Helsinki accords, now confirmed in Madrid, as a document recognizing the divi-sion of Europe and Soviet domination over Eastern Europe. Madrid is thus the equivalent of Yalta. The confirmation is valuable to Moscow, Indeed, the strongest By Leopold Unger threat the West could brandish against an eventual Soviet intervention in Poland was that of reconsidering the Helsinki Final Act.

By agreeing in Madrid to an agenda of eight meetings, the So-viets have meanwhile breathed new life into East-West dialogue and cooperation. Moscow believes it can increase its access to Western technology by playing up the ri-valry between America and Western Europe, and in this way be safe from embargo or trade restrictions. Furthermore, in exchange for minor concessions and promises to release a few lesser hostages (Pente-costalists, but not the Sakharovs), Moscow prevented the West from making clear that the Stockholm disarmament conference will deal with conventional weapons only. Theoretically, then, that conference could also discuss ouclear weapons, and the Soviets can use that forum to promote their "various peace initiatives" and try to influence the Geneva disarmament negotiations.

Deployment of Euromissiles is to start in December. The preparatory stage of the Stockholm conference is to start in Helsinki in October. Moscow convinced the West to begin the disarmament conference quickly — that is, next January — and not to limit its duration, which means it could go on for 10 years. By contrast, the human rights discussions due in Ottawa and Bern, which should prove embarrassing to the Kremlin, are put off until 1985 and 1986 and are to last no more than six weeks.

As for the "right of workers to organize unions," the Kremlin obtained the restriction that unions ean operate only "within the framework of the law of each respective state." What that can mean has been seen in Poland.

. Not once in the 40-page Madrid document is Poland mentioned. Yet the conference took place in the shadow of Polish developments and was obviously influenced by the struggle of Solidarity.

Nor is mention made of those persons in the Soviet Union and Poland who have been imprisoned for monitoring respect of the Hel-sinki agreements. By the time the meetings in Ottawa and Bern come to order, little will probably be left of the Helsinki watchdog commit-tee set up by Solidarity. Madrid was clearly a success for Moscow.

All the same, the Madrid compromise is a two-edged sword. The West has obtained an instrument of political and moral pressure that can be effective if it knows how to use it - and if it wants to use it.

An Opportunity to Seize For Northern Ireland

By James Shannon

The writer is a Democratic congressman from Massachusetts and a member of the House Ways and Means Committee.

WASHINGTON — in Ireland, feudal wars, foreign conquests and centuries of oppression, economic depression and mass emigration have come to this: a conflict concentrated in the six counties of Northern Ireland, 14 years of horrific violence, thousands of lost lives and livelihoods, and no end in sight.

A visitor to America, Nobel Peace Prize laureate Mairead Corrigan Maguire, told a delegation of senators and congressman that the dominant emotion in her country is anger anger directed at both chief antagonists, the British government and the self-ordained freedom-fighters. In the United States, most of the 43 million Irish-Americans are mute on the subject - confused and tired of trying to decipher what is going on.

With the British election now past. Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher has an opportunity and an obligation to improve the situation in Northern Ireland. There are at least four steps that could help diminish tensions.

Mrs. Thatcher's opportunity stems from her sizable victory margin. Her obligation to look again at the situation arises because some of the deep-est scars in Northern Ireland result directly from her policies. For instance, the unemployment rate is 25 percent, twice that in the rest of the United Kingdom and higher than that at the peak of the Depression.

Anger in Northern Ireland is motivated by the violence, the economy and the prison situation. The violence has been constant and debilitating. There have been more than 2,300 victims since 1969, more than half of them innocent ci-vilians. Who killed them? The best evidence comes from a Dublin-based journalist who researched the 2,250 deaths that preceded June 1982. He found that more than half could be attributed to Republican groups like the Provisional Irish Re-publican Army, more than a quarter to loyalist groups like the Ulster De-fense Association, and 11.7 percent to the security forces. In 182 cases the assassins were unknown.

More than 25,000 people have been seriously injured - a statistic that does not measure psychological trauma and cannot account for the time lost in the lives of an entire generation of young people.

The economic picture is no less dismal. A Cambridge University economist has estimated that 24,000 jobs have been lost. This economic degeneration is likely to continue in the absence of renewed interest by Mrs. Thatcher, because Northern Ireland depends oo British government expenditures for 75 percent of its gross domestic product and 45 percent of all employment.

The bunger strikes and Mrs Thatcher's obdurate bandling of them left Northern Ireland in a deep chasm. She claimed victory after 10 prisoners died, and promptly granted reforms that could have ended the bunger strikes before they began. At the end, the "men of violence" had gained martyrs, recruits and votes; Mrs. Thatcher had solidified her reputation as the "iron lady." and Northern Ireland had lost 64 more people killed in the violence that followed prison deaths.

Mrs. Thatcher has taken one positive step by retaining James Prior as Secretary for Northern Ireland. He has brought energy and genuine concern to the post, if not yet meaningful results. Now she should take others. First, she should continue the Anglo-Irish dialogue that was short-circuited by the Falklands war.

Second, she should encourage involvement by the Unionist community in the New Ireland Forum announced by Mr. FitzGerald io March. With the participation of the three major political parties in the Republic and the major Roman Catholic party in the north, the Forum is a sincere attempt to put substance behind traditional assurances of protection for the Unionist point of view in a "new Ireland." Third, Mrs. Thatcher should ban the use of plastic bullets. Fourteen people, four of them children, have been killed by them. A British com-mitment to use other crowd-control methods would emphasize a real determination to turn things around.

Fourth, it may be necessary to consider a mini-Marshall Plan for Ulster. Britain could not bear the burden of that restructuring alone, but a wellconceived economic recovery plan in-volving Britain, the Republic and the United States could go far toward resolving many of the problems that underlie the violence.

The way forward is through democratic processes and a commitment to social and economic justice. If those who seek power with the bomb and the bullet are to be turned away, Mrs. Thatcher would do well to seize her opportunity and apply these reforms. The New York Times.

A Year of the Bull

Other Opinion

FROM OUR AUG. 15 PAGES, 75 AND 50 YEARS AGO

On the 13th of August last year — it was a Friday - the stock market, having sunk dismally low, suddenly leaped upward. In the phenomenal rise that followed, the Dow Jones Industrial Average climbed 60 percent. It is always perilous to try to explain why stock prices move as they do, but at least in broad, outline the reasons for the great bull market of the past year are pretty clear. The turnaround last August was a response to the drop in interest rates that had begun six weeks earlier, and the rates were falling as a result of two political developments: The Federal Reserve Board had decided to relax monetary policy, and Congress, with the belated but vigorous support of President Reagan, was in the final stages of enacting a tax increase.

Of the two, the tax increase was the more important development. Without it, relaxation by the Federal Reserve might well have set off a wave of fears of more election-year inflation and sent rates up rather than down. The tax increase had little immediate effect on the deficit but great importance for the years ahead. Previously the forecasts of federal deficits had indicated a continuous widening from year to year through the 1980s. With the passage of the 1982 tax bill, the deficits were stabilized at more or less the present level.

Investors found that reassuring.

Half a year later the recession finally ended.

The Berlin Wall: 22 Years

Perhaps that is one reason why the stock prices peaked and began to fall in late June. It is important oot to overdo the point. The relationship between the rates and stock prices is out rigid and immutable. But, generally speaking, it is true that high and rising interest rates are oot good for the market.

The past year's history also suggests some of the limits on the ability of the Federal Reserve Board to influence interest. The Fed works in an atmosphere sensitive to many other influences. Last year it was a tax increase that made everything else move in the right direc-tion. It will probably take another tax increase to get everything moving that way again.

By the way, in celebrating this anniversary it is useful to keep a longer perspective in mind. America has now been through 15 years of high inflation and high interest rates. If the Dow Jones average of 1968 had only kept ahead of inflation, today it would be just about twice as high as it actually is. Even after the big ride of the past year, the stocks on which Dow Jones calculates the average are worth just about balf what they were, in real terms, in 1968. Perhaps that is not the most important measure of the damage that the misadventures of the last 15 years have inflicted on the American economy, but neither is it trivial.

For Refugees From Indochina, the Disaster Continues By William Shawcross

BANGKOK — Indochinese refu-gees in Southeast Asia are no West, but in some ways their plight is worse than ever. For now they have less hope of starting a secure life in a new bomeland.

Communist and non-communist governments must share the blame. The refugees' predicament is the re-sult of the policies of a oumber of countries, including Vietnam, the United States and Thailand.

Sad to say, the refugees' situation has pointed up the limits in the ability of international organizations to protect to vulnerable, displaced people in the absence of strong commitments from governments.

In Hong Kong, Victnamese boat people are being incarcerated in what are cuphemistically known as "closed camps" but are in fact prisons.

A few weeks ago dozens of Viet-namese boat people were drowned in the Ho Chi Minh River, according to reports from Vietnam. Police fired warning shots at a boat, the people on board panicked, and the boat began to list, struck a bridge and sank.

In the Thai camp of Panat Nikon, two Vietnamese who had been denied resettlement set themselves on fire in front of officials from the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service. The INS men have shown such extreme insensitivity in their methods that State Department officials have bitterly complained to Washington.

In May, on orders of the Thai government, about 20,000 Cambo-dians were taken by bus from a place of relative security a few miles inside Thailand back to the heavily mined Cambodian border area, where civil-lians are caught in the fighting. De-spite a petition for help from 2,000 of those displaced Cambodians, neither the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) nor the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) was able to prevent their forced transfer.

The hazards facing people being sent back to the border area were all too clear to me when I visited ICRC hospitals in the area in April. I saw people whose limbs had been blown off by the land mines that have been placed in that no-man's-land. Many of the victims were children.

A private organization called Operation Handicap International fits those who have lost a leg with artificial limbs made with "appropriate technology" - wood and bamboo. There is of course no "appropriate technology" for those who have been blinded. They are sent back to the border in darkness.

In 1979 the Indochinese refugees were the center of international attention. Hundreds of thousands were fleeing from Vietnam, and up to half a million came to the Thai border to escape the chaos brought about by the Vietnamese occupation that ended Pol Pot's brutal revolution.

The West responded generously by resettling hundreds of thousands. But now it seems that Western concern has been largely exhausted. Relief workers have a phrase for this. They call it "compassion fatigue." Western societies cannot be expected to absorb endless numbers of torships, particularly in a time of the fact that Asian peasants rooted in Belatedly, the Reagan admi recession. Groups interested in reset- their land and culture do not usually tling refugees from other parts of the flee their homes for promised lands world, such as Latin America, claim unless conditions seem unbearable. that the Indochinese have been given too much precedence. There are even those in the refugee business who argue that the Indochinese relief effort itself has been part of the problem; they contend that large-scale resettlement programs have encouraged the emigration of Indochinese people who otherwise would have endured conditions at home. This argument, it seems to me, is far too neat. It conveniently blames

Even if one accepts that mistakes were made, the suffering and desperation of thousands of refugees today is a reality that must be of concern to the international community.

Refugees are still coming, particu-larly from Victuam and Cambodia. Until the passage of the 1980 Refugee Act, the United States accepted these Indochinese en masse. Since then they have had to prove individually that they have a genuine fear of perthe United States and other Western secution back home. In many cases resettlement countries and ignores this has been difficult to establish.

tion appears to have recognized the need for a policy that is more responsive to the special situation in Indo-china. In May President Reagan signed National Security Decision Directive 93, which for the first time clearly states that almost everyone considered a political refugee, with a right to enter the United States. Such people, according to a copy of the memorandum that I obtained "will not have to present independent evidence regarding persecution." If implemented, this directive could help end some of the tragedies that have engulfed the refugees as a result resettlement programs.

At the height of the program, 700 people a day (mainly Vietnamese and Laotians) were leaving Thailand for the West. Since then the numbers have gradually fallen, reaching about 100 a day in January this year. But there are still more than 162,000 Vietnamese, Cambodians and Laotians in refugee camps in Southeast Asia. The arrivals are nothing like the flood of 1979, but by any other standards they are high.

To Influence Vietnam, Strategy Has to Be Realistic

F RESNO, California — Southern California was the scene not long ago of a large and enthusiastic rally for Hoang Co Minh, a former South Vietnamese admiral who heads the California-based National United Front for the Liberation of Vietnam, an organization that is alleged to be carrying out small-scale guerrilla operations in Indochina.

Mr. Hoang's efforts to use the refugee community as a base for insurgency in Vietnam are not unique. Last summer the Hanoi government put on display Vo Dai Ton, a former colonel in the southern army who was well known in the United States. According to Vietnamese spokesmen, Mr. Vo was a key figure in American-That plans to organize domestic resis-tance to the Hanci government. It is tempting to dismiss such peo-ple as nothing more than frustrated dichards with a quixotic view of their prospects, but they are U.S. residents who would have difficulty getting into Thailand without some sort of official approbation.

It is all too easy to imagine armments for low-level government encouragement of refugee-led guerrilla activities. Among the bitterly anticommunist Vietnamese in America are many experienced soldiers who have never accepted the North's victory as final. The temptation to use the energies of people like Mr. Vo and Mr. Hoang must be substantial.

Such ad hoc movements, led by members of the old Thien regime, can only do the United States harm. In the current Southeast Asian policy dilemma it is vital that America develop an overall strategic framework for dealing with Vietna-mese expansionism and Soviet influence in the region. Support for indigenous resistance activities might be part of a workable strategy, but Americans would need to understand just how such support might further the goal of moving Vietnam away from its present militant policies.

It is worth noting that while China has been actively backing anti-Vietnamese guernillas in Cambodia, as well as a Montagnard insurgency inside Vietnam, it is unlikely that the People's Republic has any bope either of evicting Vietnam from CamBy Doan Van Toai and David Chanoff domestic regime through resistance least some Indochinese resistance activities. Guerrilla operations are movements—those led by Son Sann considered a long-term economic and psychological drain that is part of an economic, diplomatic and military strategy to deny Vietnam undisputed control of Indochina

Beijing's objective is to persuade Vietnam that its policy of antagonism toward China, and dependence on Soviet military and economic aid, will not bring security and will be vastly damaging to Vietnam in the long term. Here, U.S. and Chinese interests intersect, and in fact the United States carries on diplomatic and economic relations with Vietnam that largely parallel Chinese policy.

There is much to be said for synchronizing American and Chinese strategy. A coordinated policy could well include American support for at and Prince Sihanouk in Cambodia, for example, as well as some domestic Vietnamese groups.

But such support would make sense only for groups that have rea-sonable national constituencies, that seek to change present Vietnamese policies, that welcome a regime in Hanoi that would recognize Cambodian and Laotian autonomy, and that pursue policies of internal reconciliation and international neutrality. Above all, just as for China, American backing for indigenous resis-tance would be logical only as part of a strategy directed at exploiting the factional differences within Vietnam's ruling circles. The object of this strategy would be to discredit the ferociously pro-Soviet foreign policies and harshly repressive domestic policies of Le Duc Tho and Le Duan. It would demonstrate their continued failure and incessantly heavy social and economic costs — thereby en-couraging more moderate elements hina' that are currently in eclipse.

Such a policy probably represents the only prospect for moving the Vietnamese in the direction in which the United States would like them to go. In this sense, Mr. Hoang's United Front and similar groups are counterproductive. Any movement led by the bad elements of a bad regime can only do America by only do America harm.

Hidden Resistance

Regarding "How a Crisis Disap-pears Into Thin Air" (IHT, Aug. 6) by William F. Buckley Jr.: Mr. Buckley concludes that "if the West is going to win, it will do so because of the failure of communism, not because of the resources of freedom." It is my experience that the longing for freedom and the various, often hidden ways of resisting compliance with authoritarian rule - as so persistently demonstrated among the peoples governed by communist minorities — are the main reasons for the failure of the communists to dominate the world.

About Central America

Perhaps it's just an unfortunate coincidence but every time I pack up the Herald Tribune lately it seems that at least one trate reader is complaining that the Reagan administration has not gone far enough in threatening the Sandinist regime with violent overthrow or in backing the peasants fleeing Third World dicta- bodia or of seriously destabilizing the regime in El Salvador against the realize that the diversity of points of view reflected in your choice of columns and international editorial opinion is quite broad. All the same, as a reader of your paper and a U.S. citizen interested in furthering the cause of democracy, I would like to go on record with the firm conviction that the Reagan administration's Central American policy is warlike, outrageous and without regard for the legitimate right of peoples to abolish oppressive regimes. Some people, it seems, have fallen-for the official line that the Sandinist regime and the Salvadoran guerrilla movement are backed by the Soviet Union and Cuba and are therefore "totalitarian." This is a typical example of a self-fulfilling prophecy.

Questions of ideology could so easily be left aside. What Central Americans want is the chance to survive and develop. Will the war now being spread across the region by deliberate decision of U.S. officials address this problem? Destroying tions of recent years were ravishing them. Witness Vietnam.

guernillas who seek to replace it. I Operatic Sine Qua Non Regarding "Singers Make Opera" (Letters, June 27):

Opera lovers can only agree with John Aler's letter from Geneva on the fundamental importance of highquality singing in opera.

Opera is the most demanding of the performing arts, and there is always a high risk of not obtaining satisfactory results. In recent years growing importance has been given to conductor, staging and decor. This is a welcome trend if the goal is to obtain a speciacle complet. However, there is a growing tendency to exaggerate the importance of the production. Too much is written on why the visual or theatrical aspects are good or bad, while minimzing the much more important role of the singers. Opera lovers will always prefer a near perfect cast of singers to lush orchestral sound with poor singing. or even with good singers unsuited to their roles. Some hornible produccountries does not in any sense save musical experiences, sometimes made into magnificent records.

many James For however, that Nigeria's system often resembles pandemonium — an impression of wild disorder that nould take of management of the economy. Mr. Shagari, elected last week to lead Africa's largest country for four Falkland, on more years, faces a colossal task as he tries for a semblance of order.

Nigeria, a leading oil exporter and important trading partner for Western industrial nations, has been hit hard by the worldwide a caunabanda 🗎 recession. The country has long played a stabilizing role in Africa and is the United States' largest foreign oil supplier after Sandi Arabia. The country's success with an American-style constitution added to U.S. interest in the election

Mr. Shagari's critics, however, doubt his abilities. "Shagari has attempted to run the country with a num of disagreement" said M.K.O. Abiola, a newspaper pub-lisher and former politician. He goes for the consensus, sees himself as the first among equals. But this country needs more than that. It needs a strong leader, the kind our constitution calls for."

Some Shagari boosters seem to concede the point, but say he is a pragmatist.

Presidential confidents have said privately that during his second and final term (the constitution forbids third terms) he will have his eye on his place in history and will a vital step in building a nation out likely be less tolerant of incompe- of what, at independence a generatence and avarice. In a postelection press conference, Mr. Shagari requested "all political appointees, ministers, chairmen, advisers, special assistants — everybody — to submit their resignations by Sept. 30 so I can set up a new govern-ment." "During his first term, Shagari was held hostage by special interest groups," said Pat Utomi, a Niger-ian political scientist. "But he no longer needs anything from them."

filled with sharp invective against the president, relegated the electoral challenges to inside pages. The Nigerian Tribune, which sup-ported Obsfemi Awokowo, the runner-up, reported the mood in the ple went about their business peacefully" although "most of them were disappointed at the outcome." Explaining the restraint, political analysts pointed to the size of Mr. Shapari's victory. He won with 47 percent of the vote in the six-party race and defeated Mr. Awolowo by more than four million votes - a wider margin than could be accounted for solely by a rigging of results, except in some grossly ob-vious way. Also, no party is entirely innocent of election fiddling, observers say, so protests of fraud could open a Pandora's box of ac-cusations and investigations. In addition, opposition restraint may indicate a measure of patrio-tism and growing political matur-ity. If violence erupted in the streets, it might lead to intervention by the military and the demise of the democracy born four years ago when the army retired to the barracks after 13 years of military rule. Furthermore, the opposition narties had to choose between expending their energies in a muddinging match over the results of the presidential race or focusing on follow-up elections Saturday for governors, next Saturday for senstors and the following Saturday for congressional and state assemblies. in which they could lay the foundstion for more effective campaigns for the presidency in 1987. Based on the results of the presidential election, it is clear that no candidate can become president without appealing to voters across regional, religious, and tribal boun-daries. Mr. Shagari got at least 25 percent of the vote in 16 of the 19 states, three more than required. Mr. Awolowo received 25 percent in seven states, and most of his support came from members of his

China's Reforms Fail to Subdue Tibet Separatists

Small Underground Uses Violence and Subversion in Pursuit of Independence

For less cartious activists, there is certain punishment, he said. Among political prisoners named by dissidents are Losang Wang-tihk, 65, a writer who cited Mao's works on national liberation to justify Tibetan independence; Tishering Lhamo, 55, who advocated self-determination at a public meeting, and Dawa, who was caught with a speech by the Dalai Lama comments morating the 1959 rebellion.

Chinese policy toward Tibet changed in 1980 after a visit to the region by China's Communist Party general-secretary, Hin Yaobang, Startled by the deprivation he saw, he ordered immediate reforms to revive the region.

Some Analysts View New Warrants As Fad but Game May Not Be Over Yet

TONDON — Just when the Eurobond market was settling in for a peaceful August snooze, along comes a complex new game.

Inspired by the idea that Quadrex Securities couldn't make work last Tuesday, Merrill Lynch and Salomon Brothers have created a European market for options on U.S. Treasury bonds. Eurobond analysts wracked their brains to figure out how much the options, or warrants, are worth. This week, they will be back at their calculators: Friday's rally in the U.S. bond market has changed the odds.

The U.S. money-supply report Friday, showing an increase of a mere $400 million in M-1, sent bond prices soaring. The benchmark 12 percent bonds maturing in 2013 closed at -

12,92 % 11,93 % 13,46 % 13,94 % 7,86 % 12,14 % 10,63 % 10,49 %

the bonds were trading at about 87%. Since then they have shot up more than half way to the exercise price of 91%. As a result, the warrants, quoted at $19.50 offered late Friday, are (Mullers of U.S. Dollars)

Friday's rally does not appear to be such good news for holders of Salomon's one-year sparses of Salomon's one-year sparses of the salomon's o

Salomon's one-year warrants to buy the same bonds. Salomon plans to set its exercise price at five points over the price at which the bonds close Tuesday in New York. A bad money-supply report, leaving the bond market weak, would have made many speculators willing to bet on a big bounce up from 12-month lows. As it is, at least part of the bounce is past. The success of Treasury warrants however, will be determined not by The success of Treasury warrants, however, will be determined not by such bounces but by whether investors think they are getting a good deal

European investors could get similar exposure to the U.S. Treasury market by using the options on Treasury bond futures traded on the Chicago Board of Trade. But Salomon and Merrill say their warrants let shy investors avoid the documentation requirements of the Chicago market. Another possible advantage is that the warrants will be traded during European business hours, opening up opportunities for arbitrage between the two markets.

A Question of Price

So the burning question becomes whether Merrill and Salomon are charging a fair price for their service. The answer is easy: No one knows, Some investors feel it prudent to wait and see if imitators come out with cheaper warrants,

For those who can't wait, there are several ways of evaluating the cost,

Joseph Spieler, a futures expert at Kidder, Peabody Securities in London, noted that, based on prices Friday afternoon in London, an investor would pay about $1,950 for 100 Merrill warrants. Mr. Spieler figured that a similar play in Chicago would cost $2,094. Such a comparison is impossible for Salomon's one-year warrants because the Chicago options do not extend beyond six months or so.

Another method is to figure out the percentage by which the exercise price plus the cost of the warrant exceeds the current market price of the bond. At Friday's New York closing, that left Merrill's warrants with a premium of 4.4 percent (sure to widen as the warrant price rises to reflect Friday's bond-price surge). If Salomon's exercise price were based on the close Friday (rather than Tnesday), the warrants would stand at a premium of 9.2 percent. But the Salomon warrants are good for a year, twice as long as Merrill's.

"In reality, the only true valuation system is the market," a Salomon executive said.

So bow are the warrants selling? (Continued on Page 9, Col. 5)

Swiss Use Secrecy Laws In Seizing Rich Records

WASHINGTON -- Swiss authorities have invoked secrecy laws to scize many documents subpoensed by a U.S. grand jury and prevent them from being shipped to New York by the giant Swiss commodi-ties-trading firm Marc Rich & Co.

Recovery Expected For Computer Stocks

By David E. Sanger New York Times Service

NEW YORK - In spite of the tumble that technology stocks have taken in the last six weeks, analysts and other industry experts say that they expect a turnaround before the year ends. The current drop, from levels many in the industry thought were unsustainable, started soon after Texas Instruments abruptly announced that it had badly misjudged the market for its home

Since the announcement came within months after a similar one by Warner Communications' Atari unit, the stock market was badly

Investors who had already abandoned Atari fled from Texas Instruments and began looking nervously at the rest of the electronics and computer field. Then, three weeks ago, came the final blow as Prudential-Bache Securities, one of the strongest advocates of technology-related issues, declared a change of heart, advising clients to stop buying.

Those signals, clearly, are still strongly negative, at least for the computer and electronics issues. Some stocks are now trading at Apple Computer, for example, which hit 63½ in June, closed Friday at 33½ in over-the-counter trading. Even Coleco Industries, which holds an undisputed lead in the home-video sector, closed which motes an intespited teach in the home-vices sector, closed Friday at 31% on the big board, from its high of 65.

Still, the analysts say, the long-term outlook for the success of new technologies has changed little, if at all, in the past 12 months. High technology was to be one of those muscular sectors of the economy that would lead the recovery from recession.

And though many accountries will believe that they also are

And though many economists still believe that, they also are seeing that at least some high-technology products, home computers, for example, face the same marketing challenges as any other

"High technology is still the best investment over the long term," said Greg Smith, Prudential-Bache's research chief. "It is where the growth will be, because the whole economy is moving toward high technology." But the stock market, he said, "moves on perceptions, not realities."

The reality is that few analysts believe that the high-technology the reality is that lew analysts believe that the high-technology bubble has burst for good. In a few months, they say, another rush to buy technology issues is likely, and investors willing to risk another rise and fall may pick up some unusual bargains.

But many analysts and investors say they have had to grow accustomed to the fact that most technology issues have what technical market analysts call high "beta factors." That is, these technology is the same that the same technology is the same technology.

stocks outperform a rising market, and fall more rapidly than a declining one.

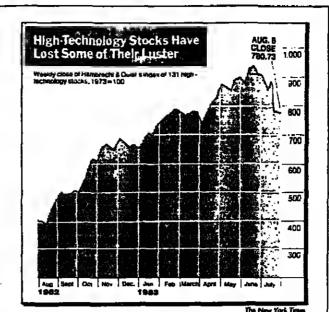

Explanations for this volatility vary. But most analysts theorize that the "high betas" are related to the mystery that surrounds hard-to-understand technologies. "People feel less secure with these kinds of stocks," Mr. Smith said. "They follow others into the market, but because everyone is uncomfortable, when bad things happen to a few stocks everyone ecomes concerned it could happen elsewhere. People keep wondering where it is going to happen next."

Thus, the losses that Warner Communications and Texas Instruments suffered in the home-computer field had a pronounced ripple effect. Among those stocks dragged down in the selloff was Apple Computer Co., once a market favorite.

Apple makes sophisticated personal computers, selling for more than $1,000, and so it was not burt by the price wars that afflicted the low end of the market. Nonetheless, investors apparently felt it was vulnerable, particularly after rumors that International Business Machines Corp. would market an $800 computer, the Peanut,

"Only now is Apple a good investment again," said one analyst, who did not want to be identified. "I'm going to buy it the day after IBM announces the Peanut."

In the eyes of some experts, however, more than unduly broad fears underlie the recent selling spree. Jim McCamant, co-editor of the California Technology Stock Letter, believes that even the most promising high-technology stocks became greatly overvalued in the past year's stock market rally.

"The selloff was caused purely by the earlier excesses of investors," Mr. McCamant said. "When you look at stocks—any stocks—you have to look at values. But in the high-technology area, people were saying. I have to buy the stock no matter what the price

Indeed, some investors went to great lengths to justify their purchases. Preston G. Athey, vice president of T. Rowe Price's New Horizons mutual fund, which specializes in high technology, says that last summer, many analysts and institutional investors were comparing stock prices to earnings anticipated during the following its months.

By January, they were basing judgments on expected earnings for the 12 months of 1983. By May, many were looking to earnings for 1984. "That is always a danger sign," he said. "People were looking further and further into the future to make their investment strategies seem reasonable."

Some investors, dismayed by the rising stock prices of established companies, turned instead to the flood of initial public offerings, many involving technology-related areas, that began early this year. But those, too, quickly became overpriced. "We haven't seen any good values among new issues since February," said Mr. McCanant, whose newsletter tracks several bright new companie Even so, most analysts expect the current downturn to end within the next three months, and say they will once again invest heavily in high technology. "For the next year or two, the outlook for these stocks is appreciably better than the rest of American industry," said Gregory L. Kelsey, senior technology analyst at Hambrecht &

In opposing the earlier merger proposals, the Justice Department had argued that they would have stifled competition among distributors in the sale of movies and other programs to cable systems

Americans Turn to European Stocks

By Adrian Croft

NEW YORK - U.S. interest in European companies has greatly increased in recent months, as a strong dollar and buoyant U.S. stock prices have made many foreign stocks appear to be bargains, according to analysts.
While U.S. investors have long sought shares in Japanese compan ies, the investors only recently turned their attention to undervalucd shares in West European companies, especially in the electronic, chemical and pharmaceutical sectors, the analysts said. Such British companies as Imperial Chemical Industries and Dunlop Holdings, both traded on the American Stock Exchange, have figured high in the list of the most-active stocks in the last few

George Krug, of Dean Witter Reynolds Inc., said major institu-tions had bought shares in ICI in the belief that its improved efficiency would leave the company ready to perform well when Western Europe came out of recession. Such faith in ICI's performance was rewarded last month, when the company reported that first half net profits nearly doubled to £196 million ($290 million), or 30.9 pence a share, from £99 million, or 14.5 pence a share, a year earlier. Dunlop, with its tire business accounting for 57 percent of 1981 sales, should benefit from a resurgence in the automobile industry after the recession, analysts said. Trading in Dunlop and ICI stock in the United States is in American Depositary Receipts, which represent common shares normally deposited with a bank. The ADR's can be publicly offered in the United States by foreign companies. But analysts say many additional receipts are being created by investors buying shares on an overseas stock exchange and leaving them with a custodian bank, which then authorizes a U.S. trust company to issue the ADRs. A trust company charges a fee of only a few cents a share to issue ADRs, they said rather than the giants of the European drug industry, she said. Glaxo's popularity has been boosted by its Zantac ulcer drug, which began selling in the United States last month, and its Zinacef antibiotic, which has gained preliminary sale approval from the United States.

Some analysts said the U.S. interest in European companies was more general, citing such electron-ics companies as Philips of Holland and Britain's Racal Electronics. John Abbink, of Merrill Lynch & Co., said there has been a marked increase in U.S. demand for shares in Unilever, the Anglo-/Dutch maker of consumer goods. A Unilever spokesman said the U.S.-owned stake in the stock of Unilever of Britain and Unilever of the Netherlands, taken together, increased to around 16 percent as of May from only about 6 percent at the beginning of 1982.

A reason for the increased U.S. investment was that economic activity in Europe seemed to be picking up, Mr. Abbink said. There was also a feeling that European concs and fertilizers. cerns were coming out of the reces-U.S. investors have also shown sion with more efficient operations.

Saudi Currency Devalued Again

BAHRAIN - Sandi Arabia devalued the riyal Sunday for the second time in a week, suggesting a shift in the country's exchange-rate policy, foreign-exchange dealers said. The Saudi Arabian Monetary Agency adjusted the riyal's va-hie to 3.48 to th dollar from 3.47, only one week after devaluing it from 3.45. Dealers here described the two devaluations as an apparent departure from the policy the kingdom has followed since August 1981 of occasionally re-vising the riyal's fixed value against the dollar. They said the actions were taken because of the extraordinary strength of the dollar, which was pulling up the value of the rival against other major currencies. That encouraged imports into Sandi Arabia at a time when falling oil exports were pushing the country into balance of payments deficits.

The dealers said that, while it was too early to be certain of a policy shift, the moves might indicate a return to a policy of frequent adjustments in the currency's value.

TEAR the end of his remarkable journal based on a year spent flying assault heli-copters for the First Cavalry in Vietnam from August 1965 through July 1966, Robert Mason describes stopping over in Honolulu oo his way back to the United States and buying some sundries at an airport gift shop: "The clerk, a young woman, took my money and asked if I was returning from Vietnam. I said yes, proudly. She suddenly glared at me and said, 'Murderer.' I stared at her for a long minute, feeling confused. Then I smiled I realized that she was talking about someooe

That Mason should have reacted so is understandable in the light of the experiences he has just finished describing. What is surprising is that the reader too takes the elerk's remark as a slap in the face. Nearly 20 years after the event, when the majority of Americans still look upon their country's role in Vietnam with feelings ranging from chagrin to outright shame, on

Why are we shocked by the clerk's accusa-tion, particularly after having re-experienced, almost at first-hand, the hopelessness and sheer insanity of the war in Vietnam? The boringly obvious answer is that we have identified with Mason's point of view. Yet how can this be, we wonder, when we have read at least a dozen previous first-hand accounts with a and when, at the same time, our sense of the war's futility has grown in inverse proportion?

The answer lies in the remarkably concrete detail with which Mason has reconstructed his experience. "As a child I had dreams of levitation," he begins the first entry of his diary. "In these dreams I could float off the ground only when no one watched. The ability would leave me just when someone looked." This evocative fantasy makes it easy to understand why he would want to become a helicopter pilot, and so it is with perfect logic that we follow him through the intricacies of learning something proficiency. Before too long, we are marveling at Ma. son's ability to hover mere feet above the ground with tracer bullets winging in like many homicidal fireflies; or to coax his sile gently out of the muck of rice paddies; or literally to bore his way through foliage (which is why these machines are appropriately known as "choppers"); or to fly on group missions in such close formation that the rotors of the various crafts are actually overlapping. When we have here, then, is a bird's-eye view of the war, and if we forget its horror for a while, it is only because the fulfillment of the fantasy of flight is rendered in such brilliant colors.

Not that Mason has stinted the horror. But so compelling are his technical details -down to elaborate frontispieces diagramming the parts of the machine he flew — that only sublimical degrees do we become aware of his mounting battle fsugue and consequent per chological disintegration. Where he ends if inside his head is harely removed from the dilemma of Yossarian in Joseph Hellers "Catch-22." Mason knows that he has gone dangerously far around the bend. But where Yossarian, when he complains to the doctor that he's airaid to fly any more, is told that his fear only proves that he is same enough to go on flying, Mason can't take the necessary step of idmitting aloud that he is afraid.

Thus he goes on acting out the role of a hero long after he realizes that the conduct of the war is insane. In scene after telling scene he penetrates the fabric of Vietnamese life and is then forced to ask himself which country is the civilized one and which the barbarian. But he still can't keep himself from acting out his childhood fantasy of omnipotence. And can't stop ourselves from identifying with it.

I wish I could close hy quoting in full one of the scenes in which Masoo demonstrates his use of detail - perhaps the prophetic incident in which a group of soldiers attack an innocent-looking green snake, not knowing that like most varieties in Vietnam it is poisonous; or the scene in which the author gets his first disconraging picture of the war from a pilot meticulously brewing coffee from a C-ration packet; or the comic account of how supply sergeants throughout the battalioo balance their books by retroacovely placing five tons worth of their missing equipment on a helicopter that has mysteriously disappeared.
("One hell of a helicopter, don'cha think?" 'Maybe that's why it went down. Slightly overloaded. By eight thousand pounds, I'd say Yep. We'll never see another like that one.

But each of these scenes is too long to be quoted in full. Besides, it is the even longer combat scenes that catch the real flavor of "Chickenhawk." It is to combat that Boh Mason is always drawn, no matter how frightened he feels (which is why he is both "chicken" and a "hawk," therefore a "chickenhawk"). And in that paradox lies the terror of his hypnotic narrative. It is comhat that becomes his natural environment. Combat becomes the only habitat in which he feels alive. Combat possesses his dreams long after he has left the war. And in realizing this, he discovers that he has gone

War on Clause Wits

By William Safire WASHINGTON — "Abraham Lincoln wrote the Gettysburg Address while traveling from Washington on the back of an envelope.

That is a famous example of a misplaced clause. Presidents do not travel on envelopes, only stamps do, and when so traveling they belong on the fronts of envelopes.

A Lexicographic Irregulars regiment that calls itself the Clause Wits — after the Prussian military strategist who habitually misplaced his clauses — stays on permanent alert for this specimen of solecism.

James Drake of New York took a hard look at an advertisement for the Hilton International Trinidad hotel that boasts: "The only hotel with tennis courts, a health club and TV in every room." He observes: "Jumping over the net to leave the room must be inconvenient." The copy might have been improved by placing the "TV in every room" phrase ahead of the tennis courts.

I have awarded leadership of the regiment to William R. Hutchison, who is Charles Warren Professor of the History of Religion in America at the Harvard Divinity School, for spotting the best recent example: . Professor Hutchison found it on the introductory panel for an art exhibit at the Dartmouth College Hopkins Center. The text read: This exhibition . . . consists of nearly 90 works by American pho-tographers executed between 1850 and 1980."

HE amendment was written in such a way," said Howard Baker, the Senate majority leader, at a subcommittee hearing in 1981, "that it could be changed through the process of evolution. But unfortunately, we don't let it evolute." That citation of a curious verh was sent to me a couple of years ago by David Mann of Kinnelon, New Jersey. It went into a file la-beled "Suspicious Sightings." Re-cently, a former White House aide sent along this quotation, which appeared in Advertising Age, of Katharine Graham, chairman of The Washington Post Co., discussing the format of Newsweek:

"With anything that works, you may want to evolute it and let it grow, but you don't want to mess with the format."

Evolute is a bastard verb backformed from the noun evolution, which is a back-formation of the verb evolve. (The legion of parameter-crazed mathematicians about to write me that evolute is a noun meaning "a curve that is the locus of the center of curvature of another curve" can just lay off.) We can assume evolute, from the Latin for "to unroll," was used by Baker jocularly, but evidently it was catching, and now our media moguls are willing to mess with the verb's for-

So what's wrong, say the permis sivists? If convolve can lead to convolution and then to convolute, why can't evolve evolve in a similar fash-

Because there are those of us' who man the ramparts, taking our weapons from the Georgetown Molotov Cocktail Circuit and heaving them with attendant ridicule at the imaginative verbifiers of

At present (I would have written "presently," but hordes of mitpickers still think that means "soon"), the verb evolute is a mistake; in time, it may become accepted as an unmistakably transitive form of evolve. We may let something evolve by itself, but when we evolute it, we switch a few genes around and give it some evolutionary help. Personally, I'd use develop, or if I wanted to dazzle 'em with education, educe.

HIS is not to say that all verbification of nouns is beyond the pale. It has been happening all along in the language, from the long-established to telephone and to map to the more recent to party and to guest-hast. (E.J., Kahn Jr. of The New Yorker wrote to say that he no longer uses "authored" as a verb, since it led to an East Side weekly's usage of "She has anthorized more than 40 articles and books.")

Here's a stirring verbification from The San Francisco Examiner sent along by Gene Marine of Berkeley, California: "Economists Say Reagan Silverlines Job Out-look." In that imaginative headline, the message comes across succinctly that the president is being overly optimistic. I am reminded of the pessimist's credo: "For every silver lining, there's a cloud."

The Agunahs — 'Chained Women'

By Scott Kraft

N EW YORK — When Heidi Stem's hus-band skipped to Mexico City, he left her with two children — and a marriage she couldn't escape. Four years later, despite her civil divorce decree, she is still married in the eyes of her family, her friends, her community and her synagogue.

Until her husband grants her a religious divorce, called a get, she cannot date other men, she cannot remarry, and if she has any more children, they will be labeled illegiti-

Heidi Stern is an agunah - a chained

She is one of several thousand Jewish women in the United States, from California to New York, from the most observant to the least, whose husbands have refused to dissolve their marriages.

Susan Avitzur is the wife of a Waterviiet, New York, federal employee. Boaz Avitzur won a civil divorce from her in 1978, but "he doesn't want her to be free to remarry and have his son call another man 'Daddy,' Boaz Avitzur's attorney, Louis-Jack

Selma Margulies of New York is the wife of a communications sciences professor at Hunter College. Myron Margulies was sentenced to 15 days in jail a decade ago rather than give his wife a divorce — and he had remarried and started another family. He still refuses to give her her freedom.

Sally Bulka, 33, is a mother of three living in New York. She supported her husband, a rabbi, while he attended graduate school. A year after their separation, Isaac Bulka still refuses to grant her a get.

Heidi Stern holds little hope that she will ever be free from her husband, Moses, who fled to Mexico City after a New York state judge ordered him to give his wife a religious divorce. She will not consider dating or remarrying without it. "I would not break Jewish law any more than I would a secular

Under that law, as practiced by the three million Orthodox and Conservative Jews in the United States, a divorce is valid only when a husband and wife appear before a beth din, a panel of three rabbis. The husband must give his wife the get, and the wife must

Without that, the wife cannot remarry in a religious ceremony or bear legitimate chil-dren. Even if she refuses to accept the get, as happens occasionally, the husband may re-ceive special permission to remarry. In any case, the label of illegitimacy applies only to her children and to his her children, not to his.

Some agunahs have given up custody of their children in exchange for a Jewish di-vorce. Others have waived alimony. A few have paid six-figure sums, in cash, for their freedom. The rest refuse such deals. "All I can tell you is this: It is a living hell," said Madeline Smilow, 28, who has been trying to obtain a religious divorce from her husband for two years. "I want my freedom back. I want my life back. I want this nightmare to end."

Many of the problem cases involve Jews who do not consider themselves Orthodox or Conservative but want a get in case they choose to remarry in a religious ceremony. Many of those cases end up at the Orthodox Rabbinical Council of America, in New York, whose beth din handles 500 divorces a

Those who balk are simply using the get as a vehicle to get back at their spouses.

That's all it is and it's very childish," said Rabbi Joseph Safsel, administrator of the council's beth din.

Among observant Jews for whom a get is an article of faith, it is sometimes used as a bargaining chip. Richard Kurtz, a New York attorney and Orthodox Jew who has handled more than 100 divorce cases, said a client's father recently delivered a $100,000 certified check to a husband in exchange for a get. The wife's parents also gave the husband a $110,000-seat on the New York Mercantile Exchange as part of the deal. The hashand originally asked for $1 million.

In a case last summer, a young woman's grandfather delivered $150,000 in cash — in a suitcase - to her husband for a get, Kurtz

He recommended that husbands who refused to give their wives a get should be denied privileges in the synagogue.

In Brooklyn and Queens, home to almost a million Jews, an organization was formed three years ago to exert pressure on recalcitrant spouses. The group, Get Equitable Treatment, or GET, has had its successes. But its failures "just break my heart they're so sad," said the group's founder, Gloria-Greenman, GET's 50 volunteer workers now have about 200 cases.

In Israel, where Jewish law is the law of the land, courts can order a man to appear before the Jewish court. But Jewish courts have no civil powers in the United States.

U.S. secular courts have issued such orders only after determining that the Jewish marriage contract was a valid civil contract or after the husband agreed as part of a civil divorce settlement to grant his wife a ger.

When the Avitzurs were married, they signed a Conservative religious contract known as a ketubah. In it they agreed that if they ever received a civil divorce, both would appear before a Jewish court when asked to. A New York state appeals court, in a 4-3 decision, ruled that the ketubah was a civil contract and therefore valid. Avitzur is appealing to the U.S. Supreme Court.

Myron and Selma Margulies were married in 1962. They had two children before they split up in 1970. As part of a court-approved divorce settlement, Margulies agreed to ap-pear before a Jewish beth din and give his wife

He never appeared. A judge fined him three times for contempt of court. The fourth time. Margulies was sentenced to 15 days in jail. He spent three days in jail before he was released on appeal. In 1973, an appeals court in New York ruled that Margulies could be fined — but not jailed — for failing to honor the terms of his divorce settlement.

the terms of his divorce settlement.

Mrs. Margulies obtained a get in 1980 without her husband's consent. A special tribunal of the Jewish Theological Seminary, in Philadelphia, a Conservative group, deter-mined that it had the authority to award a get without the husband's consent in extreme

The rabbi who heads that beth din said Jewish law gave rabbis the authority to annul a marriage if Jewish law was being broken. In this case, he said, Margnlies violated Jewish law by refusing to appear before the panel.

The rabbi declined to discuss the procedure on the record, saying it was being done "without publicity because we don't want the community to feel they can get an annulment with so much ease. Orthodox Jews do not have that option

Mrs. Margulies's get would not be recognized by an Orthodox rabbi. But she said she "was not going to be bound by a law that only took Sally met Isaac Bulka through their fathers, both rabbis. Isaac has been trained and ordained as a rabbi, but does not have a pulpit. A few years ago, they bought some real estate in Atlantic City, later sold it to a casino and became millionaires. But the marriage fell apart more than a year ago and Bulka has refused to give her a get. Their civil divorce case is still in court, but Mrs. Bulka said a civil divorce would not be enough. "If I get a civil divorce, I am not free. I want my freedom," she said.

King of the Queen Bees

By Charles Hillinger

Los Angeles Times Service GLENN, California—"Honey puts pep in your step and I eat a lot of it," says Clarence Wenner, who is known by beekeepers around the world as the "Grand Old Man of Queen Bees."

Wenner, 79, ships 40,000 queen bees from his apiary in Northern California every year to South America, Europe, Asia, Canada and Wenner's queens are eagerly sought by beekeepers because of their gentle dispositions and because their hives are good honey producers. Some queens are nasty. They'll sting you every time," Wenner says.

He explains that the queen bee flies from her hive on her seventh day of life and mates up to 12 times with drones, who die on contact with the queen. "She never mates after that day. She'll be away from her hive about an hour, then flies directly back to her hive after mating," says the beekeeper.

"The whole story is incredible," Wenner says. "A queen can lay eight times her weight in eggs in one day. The colonies are well-organized. The bees are industrious. But it is the queen who holds it all together. She is the key to the whole WOTES."

Wenner ships his queen bees by air mail in tiny pine boxes. Accome panying the queen are half a dozer, worker bees who feed and care for

He charges $6 for each queen.

The beekeeper's fascination with the winged, stinging insects has not waned. "There's something about bees. You get your nose into a beehive and it settles you down, makes days during a busy summer. The the worries go away," he says.
